

style

CANADA'S FASHION SOURCE

KNITS GONE WILD

RUSTIC COTTONS AND BOLD CASHMERES THROW SPRING KNITWEAR FOR A LOOP

GAME, SET, MATCH

THESE AREN'T YOUR MAMA'S TENNIS WHITES

NEW YORK FACE

Founder of Canadian cosmetic company FACE atelier Debbie Bonder says she hasn't been able to stop smiling. And that's not surprising, considering FACE atelier was the official makeup sponsor of New York Fashion Week's Stylelounge this September, proudly bringing some much-needed Canadian flavour to the star-studded runway.

At the heart of the FACE atelier Pro Team was makeup artist Nathan Hamilton. By focusing on "doing the best job possible for the designers," the bi-coastal team set to work executing an aesthetic that was clean and simple. As Bonder puts it, "This was not about FACE atelier."

Bonder's company was born in the kitchen of her Calgary home in 2003 and has quickly become a thriving global business. Boasting a complete line of high-quality "makeup for grown-ups" as well as tools, FACE atelier offers women sophisticated and versatile products for the face, eyes and lips. The line was created to "encourage women to be the best that they can be," Bonder says, "because looking good is the best revenge."

For more information, visit www.faceatelier.com.

INTHEBAG

FRAGRANCE : MAKEUP : SKIN : HAIR

SPRING FLING

WHERE WILL CANADIAN DESIGNERS TAKE YOU NEXT SEASON?